“ I met Gail through her nephew Jason, who is my late husband. The only time I got to meet her was when she traveled with her family to Jason's funeral services - she was so sweet and comforting, and Gail shared some wonderful memories about him during the service. Most of all, she was a huge support to her sister Cheryl, Jason's mom, during such a horrible time.

Gail and I would never meet in person again, but over the years we would talk from time to time on the phone and via Facebook messages and posts - I always enjoyed seeing the latest crafts she was selling or the latest event she was planning for church or for someone's special occasion. What I will remember most is her generosity and her absolute faith and love for God - Gail was one of the few people I've known that would actually walk the walk and not give her faith just lip-service.

The last time I spoke with her was on Christmas Day - she was pretty weak but said she was glad to hear from me, and we spoke for about 30 minutes. She told me that she was so looking forward to joining Jesus and all her family and friends that had passed before her in Heaven, and I absolutely believe that's where she is, looking in on us all here on earth.

One last thing - I was out of town for Christmas, and when I returned just before New Year's there in my mailbox was a Christmas card from Gail that had arrived on December 24 - in her time of sickness and pain she took the time to send holiday greetings. That, in a nutshell, speaks to the kind of woman Gail was.
